

Mystery Number Six

Note: entries that claim a dog but fail to identify the breed will receive only half-points.

IMAGES:

(click on image to enlarge)

Here is the first shot of the dog deer -- apparently heading for the LM.

(click on image to enlarge)

The second shot reveals the pointed end of the tail.

(click on image to enlarge)

Why do these things always happen to me . . . ? My own best guess is a coyote, but even the pointed tail on the specimen below (photographed in a field near Woodstock) would come to a bit below the animal's heel when at rest and not barely halfway down, as in the image above. Coyotes, however, normally have red behind the base of the ears.

(click on image to enlarge)

But here's a coyote with a relatively bushy tail that I take to be more typical of the species: